Roanoke, Va.

Roanoke, Va. continued with unabated popularity. The minister of the navy became very impatient. Eventually he determined to cure the women of their fondness for visiting the vice admiral, as he could not cure him of his fondness for receiving them.
One afternoon while an Italian countess and her two friends were drinking coffee on the Richelieu, the vice admiral was unexpectedly order ed by marine signals, made from the shore at the minister's instance, to weigh anchor at once and without any previous communication with the pair. They begged to be sent ashore. With all his gallantry, however, the admiral was a thoroughbred sailor. Nice by rail from the French seaport.
